Codorna's quarters by order of the Pope to explain that foreign military for the moment rule Rome, and the Pope was unable to prevent resistance. The Pope wished to know what course Codorna intended to take.

Codorna replied that his purpose was fully set forth in royal proclamation, but that the King's patience was tried by resistance on the part of foreign troops. Baron Von Arnim asked twenty-four hours' delay, that he might bring additional influence to bear on the Pope. Codorna yielded so far as not to attack Rome for twenty-four hours, but reserved the right to move his troops, which now encircle Rome.

THE FUTURE OF BREADSTUFFS.—The Mark Lane Express, after enumerating all the favorable thing that can be said of the general bread market, thus concludes its speculations:

"Be this, however, as it may, a prolonged war on the Continent must eventually affect the price of wheat. It is, in the first place, impossible but that the manœuvres of such immense armies as are now in the field—and which are likely to increase in numbers rather than otherwise—must unavoidably interfere with the operations of husbandry, as well as with every other industrial occupation. This, it will be said, is a future consideration, but to this we must add the waste and extra consumption of war, which, on so large a scale, cannot be an unimportant item in the scale of supply. It therefore appears to us, that, unless repeated and greater reverses should tend to put an end to the contest, prices must necessarily rule higher as the war proceeds. The Americans report a large deficiency in the corps of some of the best wheat-producing States, and they will therefore want a higher price than they otherwise would, even if they do not avail themselves of the closing of all the Prussian ports in the Baltic elsewhere. This will be only a natural consequence of the war, and will extend to the East as well. If Western Europe is shut up chiefly to those two sources of supply, it would be beyond human nature if the shippers did not take advantage of their position."

The New York Star has this illustration:

"Take, give the baby some lanum and put it to sleep, and then bring me my person; I am going to a meeting for the education of mothers in the care of young children." "Yes, mum?" Average weekly death rate in New York City, 65%; of children under five years of age, 40%. That's so."

The Tehuantepec surveying expedition will sail in about two weeks.
